Meanwhile, Senate President, Chief Ken Nnamani, has lamented the killing in Lagos of Mr. Godwin Agbroko, who until his death was the chairman of the Editorial Board of Thisday Newspapers. Senator Nnamani in a condolence message issued on his behalf by Mr. Austen Adamu, Special Adviser, Public Communications said the killing "called attention to the need for the police to take urgent steps to guarantee the security of lives and property in the country."

The Public Relations Officer, Fashola Campaign Group, Mrs Morunranti Adams, in a statement said: "Last night (Wednesday) at about 11:45, two of our staff were attacked at Bariga by unidentified gunmen. Mr Fashola, expressed shock, calling on the police to find the perpetrators and bring them to book. He, however, distanced himself from being speculative, saying the attack "has nothing to do with politics."

Fashola said he had beefed up security around his campaign team and pledged to take care of the bereaved family.

But the Police said, yesterday, they were yet to be brief on the incident by those concerned. They, however, promised to do all within their power to apprehend and bring the perpetrators of the crime to book.

The Command's spokesman, Mr Olubode Ojajuni, said Policemen at Bariga were attracted by sporadic shootings in the area as a result of which an Anti-Robbery team was dispersed to the scene.
