Anti rape rioters killed Yari's CSO — Police source

BY EMEKA MAMAH

THE Zamfara State Governor's Chief Security Officer, CSO, Police Superintendent Ibrahim Bamuche, who was declared missing by the state police command, may have been killed by women who were protesting against rapists in Jos, Plateau State, about three weeks ago.

SUPOL Bamuche was on his way to the Plateau State capital for a promotional course when he reportedly ran into a group of female protesters who allegedly killed him at Maraban Jama'a in the state. The women were said to be protesting against incessant rape cases of women and children by men from a particular religious group when the CSO who was allegedly said to have stopped to buy some snacks, having traveled for a long distance, unknowingly ran into them.

According to a police source in Jos, "Supol Bamuche stopped to buy some snacks after driving for long distance.

"He parked his car and went to some shops which were under lock and key and apparently decided to cross the road to look for something to eat, not knowing that some women were protesting against certain tribes or religious groups, which they suspect that their men had been raping women including children in the area.

"As soon as they women protesters accosted him, they killed him with sticks and other crude weapons before setting his car on fire.

FG seeks US help to fight terrorism

BY DANIEL IDONOR,
Abuja

THE Federal Government yesterday urged the United States of America, USA, to assist Nigeria train her Military and other security agencies to enable to her address her current security challenges.

Vice President Namadi Sambo made the plea when the US Deputy Assistant Ambassador Vicki Huddleston paid him a courtesy visit at the State House, Abuja, against the backdrop of bombings in some parts of the country, including the police headquarters and the UN building in Abuja by the Boko Haram Muslim sect. Sambo who noted that terrorism was a new phenomenon in the country praised the efforts of nation's security agencies for rising up to the occasion in spite of lack of the needed training and sophisticated equipment to curtail the menace.
