How local vigilante tortured apprentice to death on October 08, 2014 / in Crime Alert 12:19 am / Comments

By Evelyn Usman

It came like a friendly call, but ended up as the last call for Asomugha Ndubuisi, 25, a technician with a Suleja based private company. The ugly incident which took place on Tuesday, September 30, 2014, climaxed with Ndubuisi being dumped in the morgue.

Time was 7pm. His phone rang. Without the slightest inkling that it was a call signaling his death, Ndubuisi, a Senior Secondary School Certificate holder, picked the phone and the unknown caller informed him about a job that needed his immediate attention.

THE TRAP

He quickly rushed his food, picked a shirt and dashed out of the house. Destination was Minna garage, in Suleija Emirate, Niger state. On arrival, he reportedly met three hefty men. But before he could make u-turn, he was reportedly grabbed by the men who thundered, “so, you are the person that stole your boss’s equipment”?

Without waiting for an answer or explanation, one of them was said to have landed his fist across Ndubuisi’s face. This was followed repeatedly with punches, which left defenceless Ndubuisi shouting for help and crying out in excruciating pain. Despite passionate pleas that he knew nothing about the missing equipment, the beating continued unabated. Soon his voice became faint, while help was no where to be found.

As you read this piece, the remains of Ndubuisi is lying in the morgue. Autopsy report stated that he died from internal bleeding owing to the severe beating from his assailants who were alleged to be members of the Emirate Council security popularly known as ‘Yabanga Boys’.

THE MASTERMINDER

Surprisingly, Ndubuisi’s boss at the White Dove Ventures Nigeria Limited (names withheld), was alleged to have masterminded his killing. The office, located at Area Command Quarters opposite Zenith bank, on the outskirts of Suleija,
