

Why I killed my madam — Househelp

By Dayo Johnson

AKURE—A houseboy, Emmanuel Akpan, has said he murdered his boss, Mrs Febisola Adedayo, because his friend, Goodness Ekpe, informed him that she kept a huge sum of money in the house.

The suspect hacked his boss to death with a cutlass while she was sleeping at her house located at Ifokanbale Street, Ondo town, Ondo State.

Vanguard gathered that the deceased was a food canteen operator in Ondo town before her untimely death.

Akpan and Goodness were later apprehended at a village in Ogun State where police detectives trailed them to after committing the dastardly act.

Unfortunately for the suspects, only N3,500 was found in the apartment of the deceased after she was murdered in cold blood.

Akpan, who was paraded by the Ondo State police command in Akure, told newsmen that "it was the devil that pushed me to kill my madam. I received information from my town's boy, Goodness, that my madam has been keeping a lot of money in the house. He told me to kill her so that we can steal the money and run away."

Akpan, who said he had worked with the deceased for three years before he killed her, regretted that after killing the victim, he did not find any huge money in the house.

But Goodness denied asking Akpan to kill his madam.

The state police commissioner, Bolaji Salami, said aside the cash of N3,500 taken away by the suspects, two telephones, jewelry and a generator set were also stolen from the house of the deceased.
